Guideline: Associate Dean Higher Degree Research

Purpose
To set out the role and responsibilities of the Associate Dean Higher Degree Research.

Definitions
ADHDR means an Associate Dean Higher Degree Research.
College includes the National Centre for Indigenous Studies (NCIS), where an academic staff member fulfils the roles and functions outlined below.

Guideline
1. Each ANU College has an academic staff member who can fulfil the roles and functions outlined below. The appointee may also exercise the delegations of the Delegated Authority under the Research Awards Rule for higher degree research (HDR) candidature. The primary functions of this position are to drive the HDR agenda within Colleges, report on national, University and College HDR matters to the College Dean.

2. The ADHDR works closely with the College Dean, the Associate Dean (Education) and the Research or Executive Committee of the College depending on the reporting structure. The ADHDR also chairs a College HDR Committee, or participates in the College Research Committee, if that body is responsible for HDR matters. The ADHDR works closely with the administrative staff who deal with HDR issues; with HDR Convenors in the College and HDR candidates in the College.

3. The ADHDR is normally a senior academic with extensive supervisory experience and a strong research profile. The role carries substantial academic and administrative responsibilities and involves highly developed qualities of leadership. They have a superior knowledge of the ANU Research Award Rules and related policies, procedures and guidelines. They will monitor performance measures for all College HDR programs, and will regularly report on these within their Colleges and to the Dean, Higher Degree Research.
4. The Associate Dean (HDR) is a member of the University Higher Degree Research Committee (HDRC) and an ex officio member of the relevant College Committees.
